

Question 1 Part 3: "Do any of your findings surprise you?"

Answer:

Yes, but not in the way I assume is being asked. While the salaries, work experience, required education, job growth, etc. did not surprise me very much, the website itself did surprise me. Most of the job titles or overarching branches I find myself interested in were not featured on the website at all. Particularly surprising to me was that "Cyber" or "Cybersecurity" did not have any matches. I would have, for how common I find "Cyber" to be a keyword to search for when looking for jobs I find interesting, assumed that at least a "Cybersecurity Engineer" or "Cyber Researcher" role have been present on the website.

Question 1 Part 4: "Rank the jobs you picked from best to worst, and briefly explain why you did so."

Answer:

As stated above, there were not a lot of the job titles I am currently pursuing featured on the website. Thus, most of the jobs inputted are either vaguely similar to a job I would like to have, within my perceived scope of appropriate responsibilities compared to my own skill set, or are, in general, seemingly related to a Cybersecurity aspect that I have interest in. Following this logic, my ratings came down to deciphering which job was closest to a job I am currently pursuing, or, possibly, would pursue. 1 indicates that I do have an equivalent I am pursuing. 8 Indicates that the position is not something I am considering pursuing at the moment, or, perhaps, it is not a focus or area I find myself particularly interested in. The rankings can be found in the csv.
